

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

LIVELY GROWTH OF THE WAR FEELING IN FRANCE.

Russia Preparing for Contingencies—Gladstone Seriously Ill—Gen. Kaulbars Threatened—Duel With Swords—Reduction in Rents in Ireland.

PARIS, Oct. 12.—There is a lively growth of the war feeling in France. The Bonapartists have begun the issue of two new journals, Le Renouveau and Le Soldat, to advocate an offensive policy in vindication of the military prestige of France. Gen. Boulanger, however, disavows any connection with the papers.

M. Laveine, the military critic, writes to the Figaro that Gen. Boulanger has prepared a well-conceived plan, in conjunction with a staff officer of high rank, for a campaign against Germany.

The military says that Gen. Boulanger desires war, not for the purpose of recovering Alsace-Lorraine, but to establish a permanent step leading to the solution of social questions.

The attack upon everything German is being observed, M. Lockroy, minister of commerce, has ordered the police to prosecute all persons selling books of toys imitating the German flag, containing a map of France without Alsace.

BRITISH TROOP SHIP STRANDED.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—The British troop ship Thetis, bound for India, was driven to the beach by a heavy sea and is in a dangerous position.

CHOLERA DISAPPEARING FROM ITALY.

ROME, Oct. 12.—Three suspicious cases of illness were reported in Rome yesterday. One of the afflicted persons died. It is thought that the disease is disappearing from Italy, as it has almost disappeared from all other places in Italy where cholera has prevailed.

MR. GLADSTONE SERIOUSLY ILL.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—Mr. Gladstone is still unable to leave his bedroom. He is suffering from a severe cold, and his condition is so serious that it is publicly admitted.

DEMOLITION ELECTED BY BARRETT.

QUEREC, Oct. 12.—The Levee announces that it has reliable information revealing the existence of a plot to demolish the city of Quebec by bribery. It states that within ten days the Government has spent in corrupting the city of Quebec, and that $50,000 have been expended for the purpose.

THE CONGRESSIONAL UNION.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—The Congressional Union assembled at Norwich to-day. During the proceedings the Rev. John Hunter was introduced, and he delivered an address to the assembly that it had no opportunity to welcome the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, who was invited to address the assembly.

RUSSIA PREPARING FOR CONTINGENCIES.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 12.—The Frederick states that the Russian Government is preparing for contingencies in the contingency of the calling out of the army and navy reserves have been issued.

REDUCTION OF RENTS IN IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Oct. 12.—The regular fortnightly meeting of the National League was held to-day. The receipts since the last meeting were $1,000. The Rev. John H. Harrington said that many landlords were making generous reductions in rents, but a number of others were refusing to do so.

THE KIDNAPING OF PRINCE ALEXANDER.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 12.—Four leaders of the party who are engaged in the kidnaping of Prince Alexander of Bulgaria have arrived here. They are M. Demetoff, M. Fakoff, M. M. Kavaloff, and M. Kavaloff. They attribute the success of the country revolution which restored Prince Alexander to the throne to the efforts of the revolutionaries.

A DUEL WITH SWORDS.

PARIS, Oct. 12.—A duel with swords has been fought between M. Bauer, editor of the Levee, and Count Dion, a well-known financier. The duel was caused by comments on Count Dion's economic policy made by an article of the Levee and the Levee and the Levee.

THE SITUATION AT CHARLESTON.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Oct. 12.—There has been no earthquake and no thought of earthquake here today. The refugees are coming back from the country, and the city is rapidly resuming its normal condition.

CABLE CULLINGS.

The France-Africa cable has been completed to the Congo. The United States steamer Albatross arrived at the Cape Verde Islands, and the Kearney on the 10th.

Accident at the Naval Academy.

ANAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 12.—Surgeon General Gunn arrived here this morning, and with him the names of the officers who were killed in the explosion of the Albatross at Annapolis.

Closing the Charleston Relief Fund.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 12.—It having been decided to close the fund for the relief of the sufferers from the earthquake in Charleston and vicinity, the committee of citizens appointed to receive contributions for their relief meeting at the city hall to-day.

Death of Rear Admiral Nichols.

BOSTON, Oct. 12.—Rear Admiral Edward T. Nichols died to-day after a short illness. He had been spending the summer here, and had been in his usual health. He was 64 years of age.

ACADEMY OF MEDICINE.

Interesting Proceedings of the Convention at Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Oct. 12.—The tenth annual session of the American Academy of Medicine convened here at 10 o'clock this morning, with delegates present from all the principal cities of the country. Dr. S. S. Sutton, president, presided.

Dr. Dugan, of Philadelphia, secretary of the association, read a report on the present working laws regulating medical practice in the United States. He said the existing laws were defective, because they did not provide adequate consideration of the public interest.

Dr. Frederic H. Green, of Portland, Me., read an essay on "The best equipment for medical study," in which he recommended the study of languages.

The convention was discussing these papers when an adjournment was taken for dinner.

In the afternoon Dr. R. Lowry Sibbett, of Carleton, Pa., read a paper on "The Sibbett System of Medical Education." Dr. Sibbett stated that the standard of medical education in the United States is lower than in almost any other country.

The special committee on the "Best Education for medical students" then presented a report, in which it recommended a classical education for all students.

Dr. G. H. Smith, of Portland, Maine, chairman of the committee, spoke with considerable feeling on the position of the profession by medical colleges, which are now in a state of general decay.

An exhaustive paper on "The Status of the Medical Profession in the United States" was then read by Dr. John D. Kelly, of Lowell, N. Y. Dr. L. P. Bush, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., also read a paper on "The Advantages of a Classical Education to the Medical Student and Physician."

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

K. OF L. CONVENTION.

DETERMINATION TO PUSH THE BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Amending the Constitution—Expecting the President and Mrs. Cleveland—The Social Equality Question—Powderly's "Mistake"—Labor News Bureau.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 12.—The Knights of Labor convention met at 9 o'clock this morning, with delegates present from all the principal cities of the country. Dr. S. S. Sutton, president, presided.

Dr. Dugan, of Philadelphia, secretary of the association, read a report on the present working laws regulating medical practice in the United States. He said the existing laws were defective, because they did not provide adequate consideration of the public interest.

Dr. Frederic H. Green, of Portland, Me., read an essay on "The best equipment for medical study," in which he recommended the study of languages.

The convention was discussing these papers when an adjournment was taken for dinner.

In the afternoon Dr. R. Lowry Sibbett, of Carleton, Pa., read a paper on "The Sibbett System of Medical Education." Dr. Sibbett stated that the standard of medical education in the United States is lower than in almost any other country.

The special committee on the "Best Education for medical students" then presented a report, in which it recommended a classical education for all students.

Dr. G. H. Smith, of Portland, Maine, chairman of the committee, spoke with considerable feeling on the position of the profession by medical colleges, which are now in a state of general decay.

An exhaustive paper on "The Status of the Medical Profession in the United States" was then read by Dr. John D. Kelly, of Lowell, N. Y. Dr. L. P. Bush, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., also read a paper on "The Advantages of a Classical Education to the Medical Student and Physician."

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

Dr. W. L. Hancock, of Philadelphia, took exception to some of his statements, and said that he was not a classical scholar, but that he was a student of Greek and Latin by children at a tender age, and that he believed that it is the duty of every physician to be able to read the original languages of the medical profession.

presented to it, but took no action on any of them. It has more than 13,000 cases of this disease, and these do not include all that are to be brought before it. The board will meet again during first recess taken by the general assembly.

Mr. Powderly to-day received the following telegram from Thomas B. Barry, a member of the executive committee sent to Chicago to endeavor to settle the strike of the employees of the pork packers in that city:

The pork packers have no organization, and must meet with them as individuals. We called on several firms yesterday to supply us with meat for our dinner. We worked ten hours, while the men are first, and we look for a settlement this week.

DISTRICT FORTY-NINE OF NEW YORK.

The delegates of District 49, of New York, met at 10 o'clock this morning at a first in a lively battle opposite their headquarters on Third street. They dashed into the room and a number of horses and mules, and carriages. They were warmly applauded.

Delegates of District 49, of New York, met at 10 o'clock this morning at a first in a lively battle opposite their headquarters on Third street. They dashed into the room and a number of horses and mules, and carriages. They were warmly applauded.

Delegates of District 49, of New York, met at 10 o'clock this morning at a first in a lively battle opposite their headquarters on Third street. They dashed into the room and a number of horses and mules, and carriages. They were warmly applauded.

Delegates of District 49, of New York, met at 10 o'clock this morning at a first in